I believe the Federal Government & some of the States were far too lenient in the Microsoft settlement. Here is a company that thumbs its' nose at a previous agreement with the government (if observed, the current case would not have come to pass) and the government let them off the hook again. I am in favor of a stripped down Windows-one that allows easy removal of Internet Explorer and MS Mail/Outlook and one that does not impose rigorous registration requirements-when you purchase a liscense the product is yours to use as you want in any legal way-it should not allow MS to monitor your useage unless you specifically want it to.

Thank you,
